Job Titles for Modern Foreign Language Majors

Foreign Language graduates have a variety of career options in both the public and private sectors. Most professionals who deal with the public, such as teachers, law enforcement agents and social services professionals, benefit from having foreign language knowledge, especially when these professionals serve foreign language speaking communities. Additionally, multi-national corporations increasingly need employees with foreign language skills to process documents and work as translators. With a major in Modern Foreign Languages individuals have the ability to communicate, develop cultural awareness and sensitivity, expand general knowledge and promote more appreciation for other cultures. Proficiency in more than one language is becoming an increasingly valuable skill and enhances one's occupational possibilities. For information about these and other careers, please go to www.onetonline.org/.
